GLOSSARY

The definitions given below are taken from The Anstey Weston Guide to textile terms, published by Weston Publishing Limited, 1997.

Generic terms relating to fibres bast fibre: natural textile fibre obtained from the stem or stalk of a plant, e.g. linen, jute, ramie.

generic name: the name of the fibre. All textile fibres are classified: for natural fibres this relates to the fibre source, e.g. cotton from the cotton plant, wool from sheep.

natural fibre: a textile fibre occurring in nature which is animal, vegetable or mineral in origin.

Generic names and associated terms cotton: natural vegetable seed fibre from the cotton plant. Generic name flax: plant from which the bast fibre linen or flax is obtained.

horsehair: natural animal hair fibre from the mane and tail hair of horses and ponies. Generic name.

jute: (1) natural vegetable bast fibre. Generic name.
(2) plant from which the bast fibre jute is obtained.

linen: natural vegetable bast fibre obtained from the flax plant. Generic name.

ramie:(1) natural vegetable bast fibre. Generic name.
(2) plant from which the bast fibre ramie is obtained.

silk: natural animal protein fibre obtained from the cocoons produced by silkworms. Generic name.

wool: natural animal fibre obtained from the fibrous covering of the sheep. Generic name.

Terms relating to fibre properties

blend: combination of two or more different staple fibres within the same yarn. Fibres are blended for one or more reasons, e.g. cost, properties, appearance.

creasing: formation of unwanted folds and puckers in fabric during use, which adversely affect the appearance.

degradation: undesirable change in the properties of a textile, due to chemical and/or biological decomposition.

moth damage: damage inflicted on wool and other animal hair fibres by the larvae of the clothes moth.

pilling: the entangling of fibres during washing, dry-cleaning or wear to form unsightly balls or pills, which stand up from the surface of the cloth.

Miscellaneous terms relating to specific natural fibres mungo: fibrous material made in the woollen industry from pulling, or tearing up into fibres, new or old tightly woven or milled cloth or felt in rag form.

COTTON

Indian cotton: type of cotton characterised by relatively short, coarse fibres.

General terms relating to yarns nep: small knot of tangled fibres.

General terms relating to fabrics colourway: one of several combinations of colours used for a particular fabric.

figure: motif or prominent part of a pattern, as distinct from the ground or background.

float: length of yarn on the surface or back of a woven or knitted cloth that is between intersections.

scrim: general term, irrespective of structure, for a lightweight basecloth.

Yarn names

chenille yarn: fancy yarn produced by weaving a leno fabric and cutting into warp-way strips so that each strip forms the yarn, which has a velvety, caterpillar-like appearance.

marl yarn: yarn consisting of two or more spun yarns of different colour twisted together.

Terms relating to weaving dobby: mechanism for controlling the movement of the heald shafts of a loom. Dobby looms can produce more complex patterning than tappet looms, but cannot produce the extremely complex patterning possible on jacquard looms.

heald: looped cord, shaped wire or flat metal strip with an eye in the centre, through which a warp yarn or end is threaded so that its movement may be controlled during weaving.

- (1) a type of loom where the patterning mechanism allows individual control on any interlacing of up to several hundred warp threads.
- (2) a fabric woven on a jacquard loom.

picks: the weft yarns that run across the fabric from selvedge to selvedge.

plain weave: most common and simplest woven structure where each warp yarn or end runs over one pick and under the next pick, and each weft yarn or pick runs over one end and under the next.

selvedge: the neat, firm, longitudinal edge of a woven fabric, parallel to the warp yarns and grain. The purpose of the selvedges is to prevent fraying of the outside ends from the body of the fabric, and to give the edges of the fabric sufficient strength for subsequent processing.

twill weave: weave pattern where the interlacing of the yarns shows a diagonal pattern on the cloth.

weft: the yarns in a woven fabric that run widthways, i.e. from selvedge to selvedge.

Terms relating to knitting raschel machine: warp knitting machine with great versatility because both filament and spun yarns may be used, and up to fifty guide bars give enormous scope for patterning.

warp knitting: method of constructing a knitted fabric where the loops made from each warp yarn are formed substantially along the length of the fabric. Each warp yarn is fed more or less in line with the direction in which the fabric is produced.

Woven and knitted fabrics

Bedford cord: woven structure showing pronounced rounded cords running in the warp direction due to the particular weave.

buckram: plain weave fabric, generally of linen or cotton, which is stiffened during finishing with fillers and starches. Uses include interlinings and bookbinding fabrics.

calico: general term for plain cotton fabrics heavier than muslin. These are usually left unbleached, are made in a variety of weights, and are often used for making toiles.

challis: lightweight, plain weave, worsted-spun fabric, generally of wool, with a soft handle and good drape. It is often printed.

cheese cloth: open, lightweight, plain weave fabric with a slightly crêpey appearance, usually made from carded cotton yarns with higher than average twist.

chintz: closely woven, lustrous, plain weave cotton fabric, printed or plain, that has been friction calendered or glazed. Much used for curtainings and upholstery.

crêpe: fabric characterised by a crinkled or puckered surface, which can be produced by a number of methods.

- (1) woven fabric where short, irregular floats in warp and weft are arranged to give an all-over, random pattern within the weave repeat.
- (2) woven or knitted fabric where the crêpe characteristics are achieved mainly by the use of highly twisted yarns, which in finishing develop the crinkled, puckered appearance of a crêpe.
- (3) fabric where the crêpe effect is produced in finishing by treatment with embossing rollers, engraved with a crêpe pattern, which impart a crêpe effect onto the fabric through heat and pressure.

damask: figured fabric, originally a single colour, where the figure and the ground are in contrasting weaves, generally warp-satin and weft-sateen. Traditionally used for expensive table linen, now also used for fashion, and sometimes made using more than one colour.

flannel: light to medium weight wool fabric, often grey, of plain or twill weave with a soft handle. It may be slightly milled and raised.

gingham: lightweight, plain weave, traditionally cotton fabric where dyed and white yarns are arranged to show a pattern of small checks.

grosgrain: plain weave fabric with a pronounced rib in the weft direction, formed by using a relatively fine, continuous filament, closely-set warp and a much coarser weft, producing a characteristic ribbed effect.

herringbone: twill fabric where the direction of the twill is reversed, producing a pattern resembling herring bones.

jacquard fabric:

- (1) a fabric woven on a jacquard loom, where the patterning mechanism allows individual control on any interlacing of up to several hundred warp threads.
- (2) a rib-based, double jersey weft knit structure which shows a figure or design in a different colour or texture.

knitted fabric: fabric made by the intermeshing of loops of yarns.

leno: woven fabric where some warp yarns are made to diagonally cross other warp yarns between the picks by a special mechanism on the loom. This allows yarns that are widely spaced to be firmly held in place.

muslin: lightweight, open, plain or simple leno weave fabric, usually made of cotton.

raschel fabric: warp knitted fabric made on a raschel warp knitting machine. Fabrics range from fine laces and nets to thick outerwear fabrics.

sateen: woven structure where the maximum amount of weft shows on the face. The smooth effect is enhanced by using filament yarns and/or lustrous fibres.

satín: woven structure where the maximum amount of warp shows on the face. The smooth effect is enhanced by using filament yarns and/or lustrous fibres.

taffeta: plain weave, closely woven, smooth, crisp fabric with a slight weftways rib, originally made from continuous filament silk yarns. Now often made using other fibres.

tartan: originally a woollen fabric of 2/2 twill, woven in checks of various colours, and worn by Scottish clans, each clan having its own distinct pattern. Now descriptive of a wider range of fabrics with this type of patterning. Tartans are sometimes called plaids.

velvet: cut warp-pile fabric, in which the cut fibrous ends of the yarn form the surface of the fabric. Many effects are possible, e.g. the pile may be left erect, or it may be laid in one direction during the finishing to give a very high lustre.

Terms relating to methods of fabric construction other than weaving and knitting, and fabrics made by these methods lace: open work fabric usually with a ground of mesh or net on which patterns are worked either as the ground is made or at a later stage. The yarns are looped, twisted or knitted to achieve the openness of the fabric and the pattern. Machine made laces are often named according to the machines on which they have been made e.g. Leavers lace, Raschel lace.

net: open mesh fabric where the openness of the fabric is achieved either by the way in which yarns are twisted round each other or knitted to form holes. The holes in the net may be square, hexagonal, rounded or diamond.

Terms relating to dyeing indigo: natural dark blue dye from the indigo plant. Now manufactured synthetically, and much used for the dyeing of denim for jeans owing to its tendency to fade.

shot: effect where the colour of the fabric appears to change when viewed from a different angle. Produced either by cross dyeing where the warp and weft are different fibres and are dyed with different dyes, or by using dyed yarns where the warp is one colour and the weft is another colour. Also known as a changeant effect, and as a two-tone effect.

staining: undesirable local discolouration caused by accident in processing or use.

Terms relating to printing discharge style: style of printing where a white or coloured pattern shows on a darker coloured ground. Dyed fabric is printed with a substance, the discharging agent, which removed the ground colour. The print paste may contain a colour not affected by the discharging agent giving a new colour on the cloth where it is printed.

discharge-resist process: discharge process where the colorant for the ground is applied, but not fixed, before printing the discharge paste. Fixation and discharge are subsequently achieved in a single steaming stage.

discharging agent: substance which chemically removes colour from an already dyed fabric where it is printed, leaving a white or differently coloured pattern.

Terms relating to finishing brushed fabric: term used to describe a fabric where the surface fibres or filaments have been raised to form a soft fibrous nap, e.g. brushed cotton.

calendaring: finishing process where cloth in open width is passed through a series of large pressure rollers or bowls, some of which may be heated. This flattens the yarns, closes up the fabric and gives the cloth increased smoothness and lustre.

chintz: closely woven, lustrous, plain weave cotton fabric, printed or plain, that has been friction calendered or glazed. Much used for curtainings and upholstery.

Trade names

Dralon: an acrylic fabric manufactured by Bayer.

Asset type	Large crinoline bustle
Description	The bustle was made from crinoline (horsehair and linen) with metal hoops inside to form a domed shape and laces to secure it around the body.
Dimensions (cm)	32 x 26
Condition at time of discovery	This bustle had been crushed flat and creased due to its use as stuffing material in the back of the chaise longue. Consequently the metal frame had become bent and distorted. It was badly soiled and had staining ingrained in the weave. The object showed signs of extensive use as a wearable object, evidenced by the numerous stitch and patch repairs. Some evidence of pest infestation.
Current condition	In 2008 the bustle was conserved by Leanne Tonkin, a student conservator at the Textile Conservation Centre.

Asset type	Child's black silk mourning dress
Description	This dress had been neatly folded and placed inside the sleeve protector (C.04). It is made from a heavy black silk and has been very neatly hand stitched. The lower and back edges had been finished with a very narrow piping. Due to the colour it is possible this was a mourning dress. Evidence of a collar or neck facing which could have accommodated some sort of fastening. Small triangular sections at base of side seams suggests garment could have been cut down or made from remnants. Brown black colour.
Dimensions (cm)	approximately 38 cm (15") in length

Ref. no.	MSA C.10

Asset type	Lady's cotton stocking (foot only)
Description	Very fine machine knitting with fashioning marks, so probably purchased from a shop rather than home made. Replacing the worn foot section of stockings was commonplace in the 19 th century (see section 3.1.3 of thesis). Red sand colour.
Dimensions (cm)	20 x 9 (8" x 3½") – approximately size 5.
Condition at time of discovery	When found in 2003 the stocking was tightly folded and creased but structurally reasonably sound. Soiling and staining has caused discolouration but it is likely this had occurred after concealment caused by the chaise being stored in damp conditions. This item appears to have been very well used prior to concealment and has been darned extensively and very neatly. The back of the chaise had been buttoned and a number of small holes in the object appear to have been caused by the buttoning twine passing through it.
Current condition	Some of the creasing has been relaxed due to exposure to the atmosphere. Structurally sound.

Asset type	Fabric pieces x 5, possibly part of a dress bodice.
Description	Cotton velvet Good quality and beautifully soft. Cotton muslin lining. Sateen twill selvedge. Piece (v) appears to be the bodice of a dress or jacket, although the actual style is unclear. Other pieces could have been a cuff, a pocket and piece (i) with the scalloped shaping could potentially have been the bottom edge. All hand stitched, fairly large stitches. Remnants of thread where seams have been unpicked. Possibly black originally but degraded to a dark aubergine with spots of rust coloured degradation.

Description	Silk taffeta, black colour, pleated. Very simple cotton binding on reverse. All machine stitched – poor tension on some stitching. The early sewing machines were only capable of fairly basic stitching, such as applying trimmings, but they were faster than hand finishing. Consequently manufacturers increased the cheaper processes and as a result dresses were trimmed with abundance.

Description	Jacquard weave brocade. Sage green colour. Coral motif woven in with same stitch structure – no cut floats. Sateen/satin structure, probably silk. A photograph showing the 'face side' of a small, crumpled piece of olive-green fabric. The fabric is laid flat on a light-colored surface. A wooden ruler is placed horizontally below the fabric for scale. A small white label with the text 'T.396.6' is visible in the bottom left corner of the image.

A close-up photograph of the textile fragment, showing its wrinkled texture and olive-green color. The fabric appears to be made of a plain weave material.
